

Life Sciences Education

Life Sciences Education - Explore the anatomy of an education study Announcements There is a new postdoc opportunity to conduct research on biology instructor knowledge and practices at the University of Georgia. Life Sciences Education. Students wishing to pursue a career as a high school science teacher are encouraged to complete a bachelor's degree in the content area (e.g. Biology) and apply to the Master's of Education (M.Ed.) program through Ohio State's College of Education. For further information, and for additional information about entrance... Discover Bio-Rad's teaching and educational resources for the life sciences - lab kits and coursework for modern biology - from high school through university. The Center for Life Sciences Education is an interdepartmental program administered by the College of Arts and Sciences at The Ohio State University. The Center's mission is to develop, teach, and provide administrative support for the Biology major and Biology courses.